

BETA THETA PI . . . . Gamma Phi Chapter

ROBERT FRANTZ

The "Squires of Chautauqua" reside in an imposing limestone bombshelter overlooking the Kappa sunporch and overlooked by the Chi Omega sleeping porch. This year the uttermost alcoves of the house rang to fraternal melodies of the brothers giving forth under the coaxing of the iron-lunged songleader, lawyer-journalist Charles Roberts. Other Betas about the campus include Bob Frantz, scholarship and activity man, Bill Klein, prominent engineer, and Roscoe Walker, who was in the president's class and is a senior lawyer.

Favorite activities of the membership were going up the street to visit Sarah and Joe, trying to fix the nickleodeon in the sunroom, listening to the tall tales of the chief bull thrower, Jim Berry, pleading with Hedley for more heat, or speculating whether or not Basolo's car will make it to the city for the weekend.

Ace contact man for the order was one James Bell Quinn, though the contacts established by this illustrious lad were of a dubious character. Grant "Sugar Daddy" Hastings departed after the first semester to heed the call of Uncle Sam, leaving behind a pinmate, pining Grant hopes. Frank Sneed reaffirms his contention that the line in one of the frat's songs which reads "Hang Jeff Davis" should be altered to hang some Yankee instead.

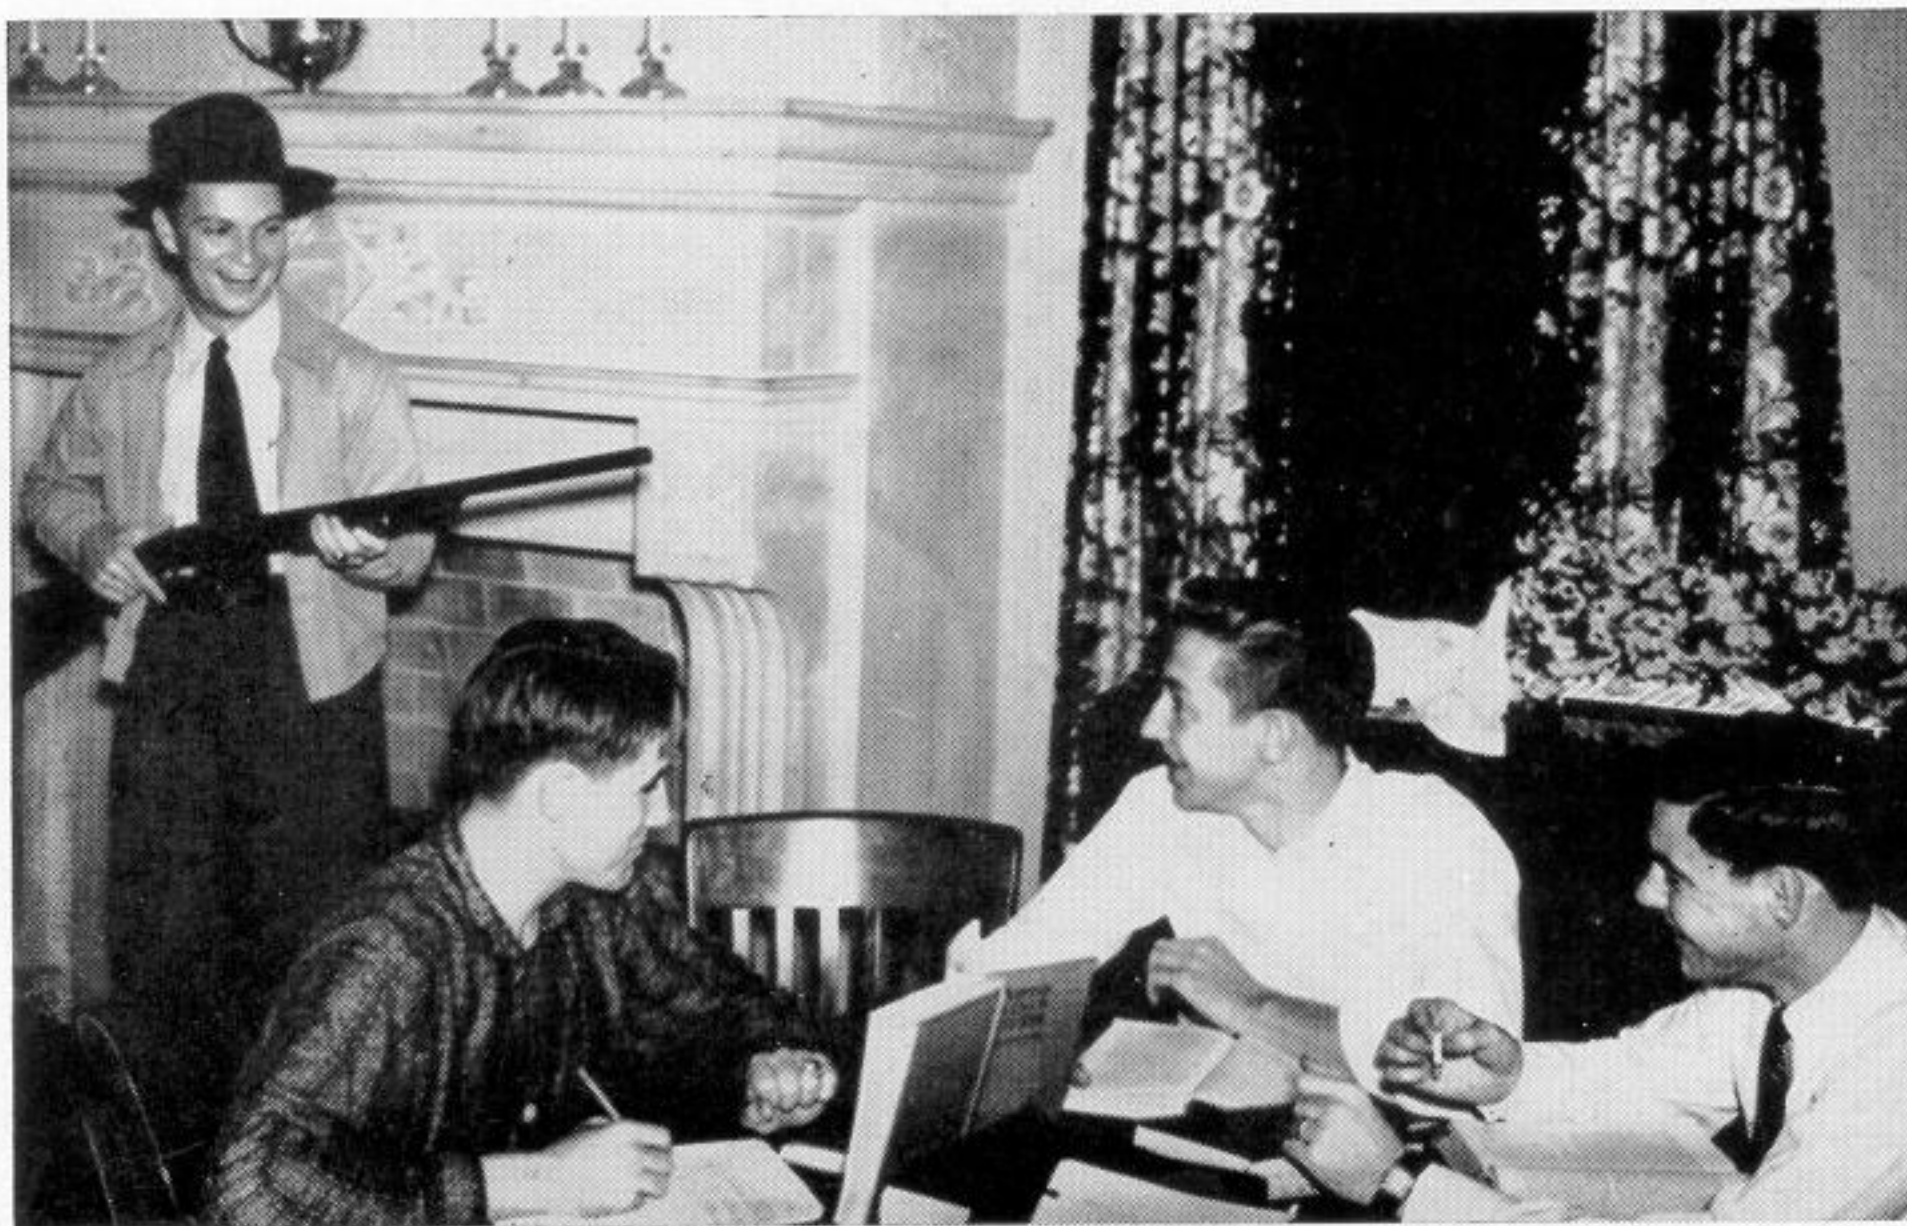

The bright lights of metropolitan areas continue to lure Cecil Hardeman, though after his sojourn in Galveston, the boys never knew just what bright lights he had in mind for the weekend. Bob Askew maintained that the newly-acquired scar on his forehead was a result of Pearl Harbor and not of an automobile accident; at any rate the ladies seemed to find it quite attractive.

After a hotly contested race Steve Burton wrested the title of "Longest Talker on the Phone" from Tom "Bunny" Lunsford, although any conversations in the house were conducted with difficulty above the happy prattling and tuba tooting of pledges Acton, Allen and Martin.

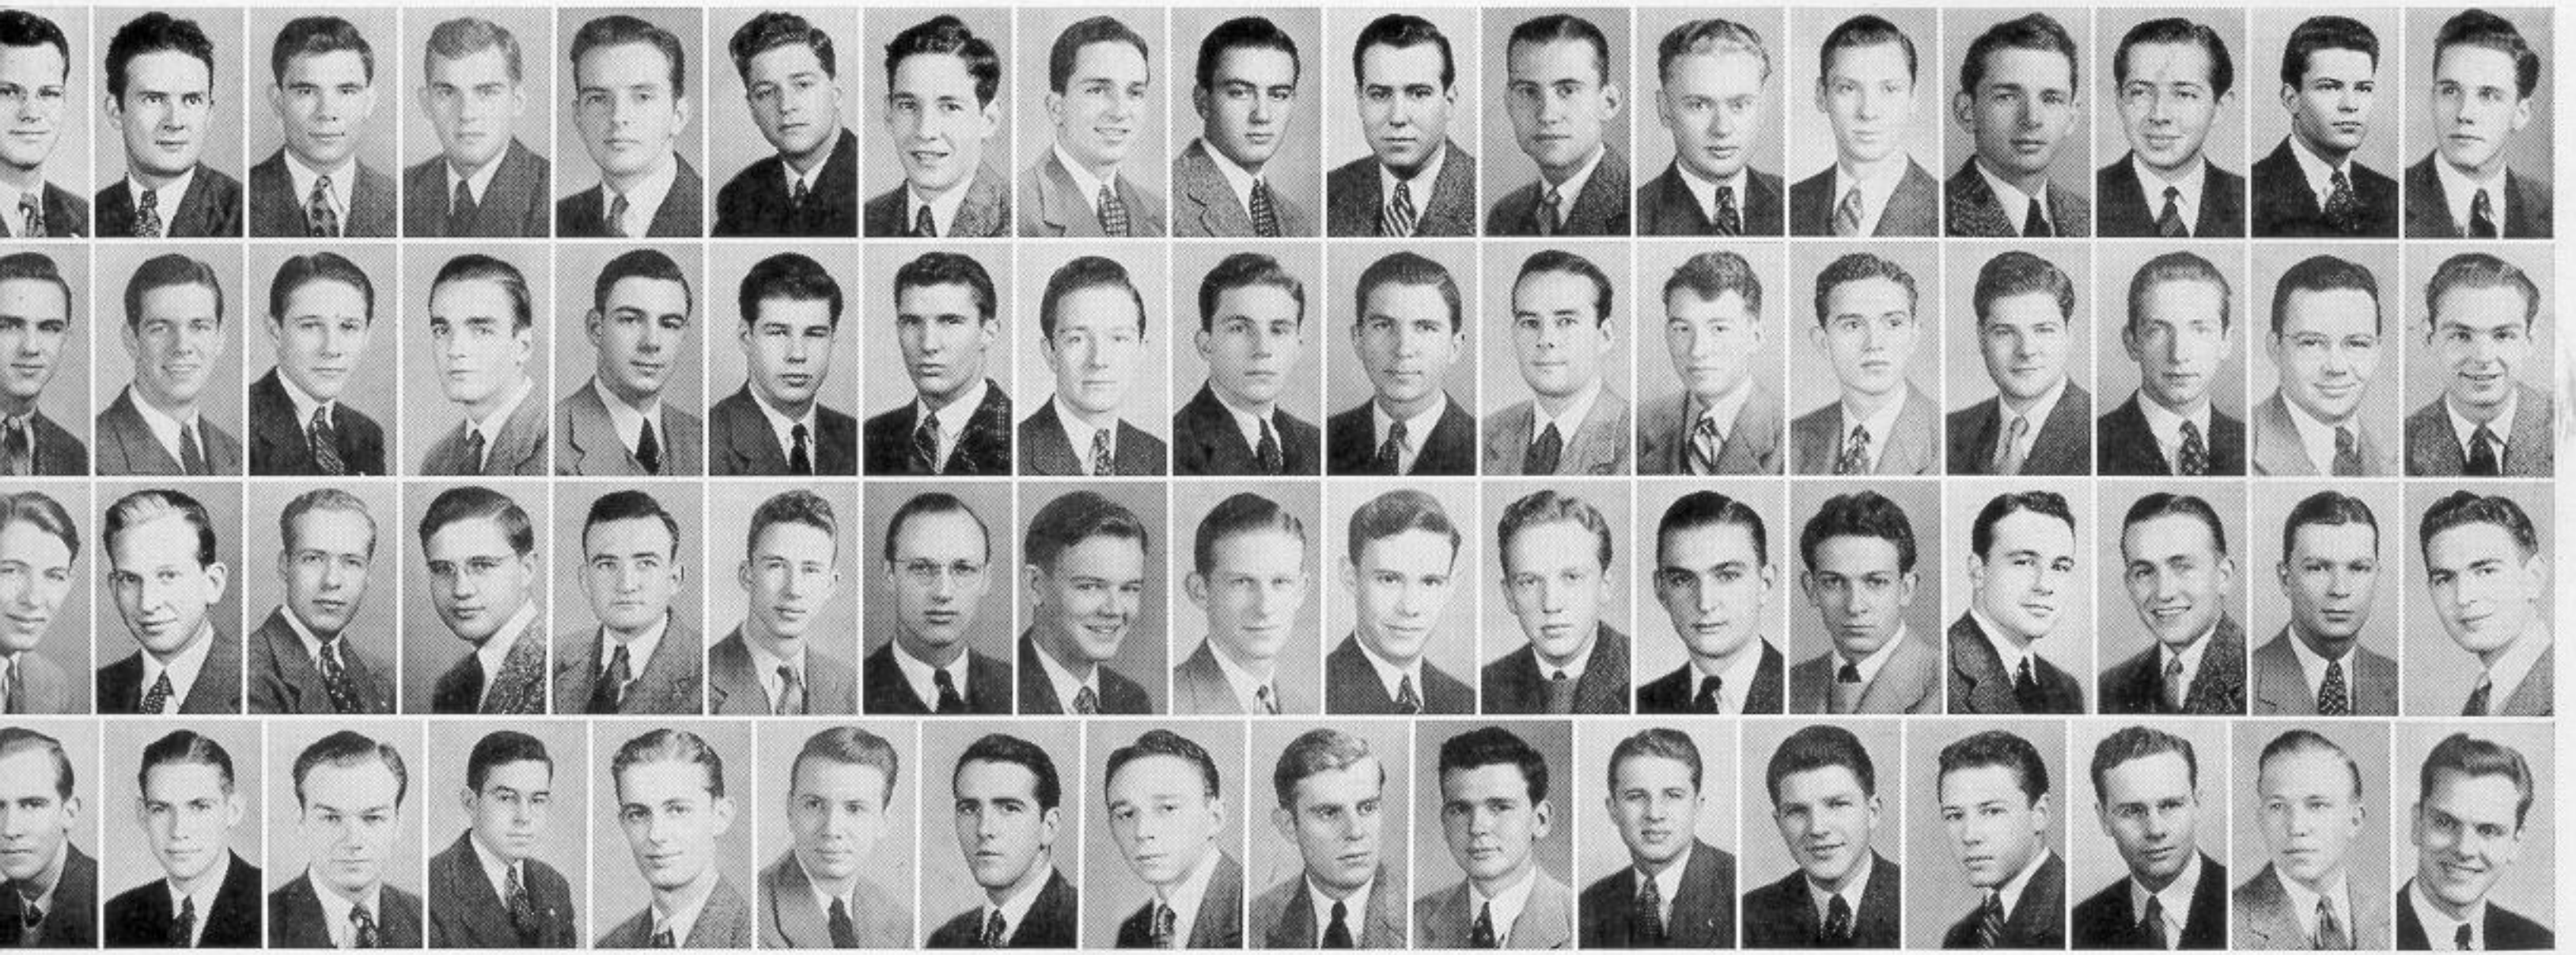

The outstanding event of the year was naturally the Barn Dance, but the football banquet and the senior dinner were close seconds. Nat Smith especially enjoyed the latter.

MRS. BEN THOMASON

One reason why the Betas manage to keep that grade average.
